

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I dedicate this book to the memory of all of my freedom-fighting ancestors, both known and unknown.

In the struggle for Black self-determination, I am proud to stand on their shoulders, for my work is an extension of their work.

I also dedicate this book to the present generation of young Black males who bear the brunt of the consequences of being raised wrong and educated worse. The insight that is widely needed to address their troubled behavior is provided in this book on their behalf.

I would like to thank all of my family members and closest friends for supporting me and giving me needed space as I worked towards completing this book.

I would especially like to acknowledge my parents Richard and Regina Clay, my grandmother Lily Mae Waller, my step-grandfather Curtis Martin, my deceased grandmother Eunice Clay, and my deceased grandfather Clarence Waller; for sincerely raising me as best they possibly could.

Thanks to all of you who have supported my work over the years and enlightened me on the topics that are covered in this book, including the staff members and the students at Detroit's Northwestern High School.

I must also thank Marcia Battles for her invaluable assistance with editing, desktop publishing, and computer technical work.

Finally, and with the utmost gratitude, I must acknowledge my mentor Kenny Anderson; for inspiring me to write this book, for his writing the Afterword; his skillfully designing the front cover graphics, and his patiently assisting me with editing, research, and concept development.
